As an entrepreneur, Adam has created countless well-paying jobs in finance, real estate and restaurants. A dedicated community member, Adam joined his local school board to ensure every child gets a good education. Then, after Hurricane Sandy, Adam helped create Project Long Island, repairing over 200 homes in Nassau County. Adam is passionate about making Nassau County an affordable place to raise a family, which is why in 2016 he accepted an appointment on the Nassau Interim Finance Authority (NIFA), Nassau County's financial watchdog, to protect residents from a dysfunctional county government. He currently is head of economic development and government efficiency for the town of Hempstead. Adam's passion in trying to make the world a better place extends to the work he will discuss at TBI helping Syrian refugees
